These states will be required to reduce the use of coal, natural gas and other fossil fuels in their electricity systems, and they'll be encouraged to do so by the administration. At the heart of those efforts are efforts from the National Governors Association and other states to lower their electricity demand to more affordable rates to reduce greenhouse gases, according to the U.S. Energy Department.. The Obama administration has released a new National Response Plan that urges all states to reduce their reliance on carbon emissions, to address climate change, and to prepare for future impacts..
